LETTERS PATENT INSURANCE LITTLE has been heard on this side, since the original announcement, something less than a year ago, of the project to form a company in London for the insurance of letters patent and it is somewhat surprising to learn, therefore, that apparently the business already has become well established. In a review and discussion of the developments, the Insurance Observer of London, says: When about nine months ago the scheme for the insurance of letters patent, designs, trade marks and other monopolies was first mentioned there was undoubtedly a disposition in some quarters to express incredulity, so novel was the idea. Insurance was centuries, not years, old, and nobody before had suggested the possibility of a great departure in this new direction. There is no longer any incredulity, because the Letters Patent Insurance Company, Limited, was not only successfully founded in June, 1912, but is also known to have subsequently transacted a large volume of business and to have received considerable sums in the form of premium!; and foes. Whether the company will become a permanent success or not is a question which time alone can decide, but it is indisputable that a legitimate and important business is being carried on, more support having been obtained than could reasonably have been anticipated in view of the brief period the company has actually been at work. Naturally, we are not aware when the first policy was issued or the...
